MULTIDISCIPLINARY INTERNATIONAL CONFERENCE ON GYNECOLOGIC CANCER

Dear colleagues,

the scientific program of this First Multidisciplinary International Conference on Gynecologic Cancer aims to address some of the most crucial topics in gynecologic oncology, present the latest achievements and, at the same time lay the guidelines for future developments in the field.

The extremely high scientific level of speakers attending the conference will make this goal attainable. The scientific program is designed not only to have views and ideas shared and compared among gynecologists but also with oncologists and researchers in basic science. The scientific committee strongly believe in the "Multidisciplinary approach" toward the medicine and particularly toward the patient.

The objective of this interaction is to underline that the "reductionist approach", even if still necessary, is not sufficient in the modern era to make significant progress in applying the latest achievements in gynecology, oncology, pathology and molecular biology. In other words the "reductionist approach" is not sufficient to reach the ultimate goal: Improving cancer care in humans. Indeed , biomedical science is moving more and more towards "a holistic approach" in the treatment of cancer patients.

We have chosen , this first time, Bologna that is the capital of the region Emilia Romagna in Italy . Bologna is the largest city between Milan and Florence , the communication center of the peninsula, the heart of a region characterized by pragmatism.

Bologna boasts an historical center packed with medieval buildings, elegant Renaissance architecture and Baroque monuments.
The city is well respected for its financial and administrative efficiency and is renowned for its excellent university, the ALMA MATER STUDIORUM , one of the first universities to be founded in the world.

We warmly welcome you in Bologna ,

Robert J. Kurman
